I. THE TRUTH ABOUT CRIMINAL RECORDS

There is a true nationwide criminal record database in the U.S. It's the FBI's NCIC database, but it isn't available to the public. The rules for public access to criminal records are established at the state level. If you're an individual or a business doing a background check you have to abide by state criminal record regulations, and each state has different rules about who may access their records and how the records will be provided. To make it even more confusing, many states leave it up to the counties to decide if and how you may access those records. And if you want to find criminal records information on the Internet it's a difficult and frustrating task to determine who offers what, whether that information is online, and where to find it.

It's a criminal record maze, and we'll try to help you find your way through it with our three-part solution:

- A) The Search Systems Premium service, which contains the single largest database of criminal records available to the public—over 300 million county, state, national, and international records;
- B) Our public records directory which contains thousands of links to criminal court records, “wanted” lists and databases, warrants, arrests, bookings, inmate, parole, and sex offender databases, as well as links to information on how to order criminal histories from state agencies—all organized nationwide and by state and category so that they are easy to find; and
- C) This “Guide” to tell you where to go to find the information you need.

II. QUESTIONS ABOUT CRIMINAL RECORDS

Here are some common questions about finding criminal records on the Internet.

Is there a true “National” U.S. criminal record database and may I access it?

There is a national database, but it is NOT available to the public. The FBI maintains a host computer that provides access to the National Crime Information Center (NCIC) computerized index of criminal justice information, (as well as fugitives, stolen properties, and missing persons). It is available ONLY to federal, state, and local law enforcement and other criminal justice agencies. The FBI claims that virtually all local criminal justice agencies participate in this system.

What about the databases provided by private companies? Do they provide access to all criminal records?

No private company or service can provide public access to all criminal records and there are three basic reasons for that:

- 1) Some states and counties want to control access to criminal records and only provide that information online themselves.

The Search Systems Guide to Finding Criminal Records on the Internet

Copyright 2008 Pacific Information Resources, Inc.

- 2) Some states will not allow the public to have access to statewide criminal records or will only provide those records through a state-sponsored service.
- 3) There are many counties that don't have the capability to gather and redistribute their criminal record information online to the public.

Then what is the best method to search criminal records?

With a hand-search of local records you can search for all variations on a name, catch misspellings or inaccurate birth dates, and get in-depth records and document copies. But hand searches can be time-consuming and expensive—especially if you have to cover a large number of jurisdictions.

Using the Internet, you can have the next best thing – instant research from the comfort of your home or office (or the local MegaCoffee shop that has WiFi). However, be aware of both the benefits and limitations to criminal records searching on the web. We wrote this guide to help with your online research using a combination of methods—to minimize the potential information gaps found with online searching.

How do I use Search Systems to search criminal records online?

There are two methods of researching criminal records through our website:

Public record information that comes directly from public agencies is going to be the most current, complete, and accurate information available. We've been searching for public record databases since 1996 and every criminal record database that we have found is located in our Search Systems DirectPass Criminal Records section. With DirectPass you just choose the national database you want, or click on a state or the international section to see what's available there. The vast majority of these sites don't charge, however some do require fees and registration. If they have fees we mark them as "Pay Sites" and we don't require registration with Search Systems to access them. We work diligently every day to keep all our links current. Every two to three days we run a program that evaluates all of the public record links on our web site and lets us know if any links are dead or broken. If they are, we repair them immediately.

But what if you don't know which jurisdiction to search or you'd like to cover multiple databases, do statewide searches, or search millions of records at once? Our answer: Search Systems Premium Criminal Records—over 300 million criminal, criminal court, inmate, and sex offender records from over 460 sources— is searchable by state for only $7* or you can search all records at once for $19*. Just click on "Background Checks" on our home page or "Premium Services" at the top of any page on our site for instant results.

*With DirectPass membership. Search prices are higher with Premium-only membership (click here to see our Premium Services price list).

Where do I start?

If you're confident that you know where a record is located, start at our DirectPass Criminal Records area within the Search Systems directory and select a state to see if that state or county provides criminal record information online. In many states, criminal records are reported at the county level. If you do not know the county in which your subject may have a record and you are checking employment or rental application, look at the cities where the applicant has lived (if you know the city but don't know the county name, use this service to find the county).

A statewide search through our Premium service is also a good starting point. If you do not know the state in which your subject may have a record, we recommend our "AllSearch" of all 300 million records in our Premium Criminal Records database. This will give you the most "bang for the buck."

Any results returned by the instant Premium Criminal Records search can be followed up with a search in the particular county (or counties) where the offense(s) appear. This is where the links in the Search Systems Criminal Records area can be useful to get even more details on a criminal case.

Where do I find the most current information?

The most current and accurate information online is going to be found through our DirectPass Criminal Records area where you can access links to databases provided directly online by public record agencies.

Many counties offer direct websites with more detailed information than that found on a comprehensive database. That's not because the companies that provide comprehensive databases want to cheat you—it's simply that they can only offer what is provided to them by the public agencies. Savvy researchers use both resources to find as much information as they can.

What if I don't know where a record is located?

Then we suggest that you use our Premium Criminal Records service, where we provide the largest single database of criminal records available on the Internet—300 million records searchable by state or all records may be searched at once.

What areas are covered in the Search Systems DirectPass Criminal Records section?

Check our DirectPass Criminal Records area for a complete listing of every international, national, state, county, and city database that we've been able to locate online since we started this service in 1996.

What is covered in the Premium Criminal Records area?

For a complete listing of all of our Premium Criminal Records sources, click here and you will find a directory that lists our entire database and includes international, national, state, and county sources.

How current is the Premium Criminal Records data?

An online search is only as accurate as the agency reporting the data. Our Premium data is updated at varying intervals. Our Criminal Records Data Sources page lists the sources and update frequency for each jurisdiction that provides criminal records. Information that is provided directly online by a public agency is going to be the most current—another good reason to use our Premium database AND our DirectPass criminal records directory.

The Search Systems Guide to Finding Criminal Records on the Internet

Copyright 2008 Pacific Information Resources, Inc.

What information will I find in the Premium Criminal Records service?

Each jurisdiction provides a different amount of information and utilizes different sources. Results may include charges, case information, gender, race, and address. Court Records may include case information, charges, and/or case records.

Where do I find Wants, Warrants, and Arrests?

Most wants, warrants, and arrests aren't technically criminal records as there hasn't been a conviction or disposition yet, so you won't find those in our Premium Criminal Records section. The place to find wants, warrants, and arrests is in our DirectPass Criminal Records section. Browse by state for links to national, state, county, and city lists and databases.

Where do I find Federal Court Records?

Federal cases are not included in our Premium databases. The best resource for searching federal court records is the PACER system, which covers civil, criminal and bankruptcy filings in the U.S. District Courts. While PACER requires registration and fees, the amount charged is very reasonable at $0.08 per page for records viewed with a $2.40 cap on dockets. We have included the nationwide, statewide, and district PACER links within our DirectPass Criminal Records directory. For those of you interested in access to PACER information, register here: <http://pacer.psc.uscourts.gov/register.html>.

How do I find Federal Prisoners?

On the main page of our DirectPass Criminal Records directory, below the state sub-folders, we have a link to the Federal Bureau of Prisons, where you can search nationwide for Federal Bureau of Prisons inmates by Register Number, DCDC Number, FBI Number, INS Number, or by first and last name.

What's the difference between Corrections Records and Court Records?

Corrections records come from the jails and prisons and provide information about convicted persons (usually current inmates), but some jurisdictions include former inmates, probationers, parolees, or even persons sentenced to house arrest. Court records provide information about pending criminal cases, or closed criminal cases resulting in a conviction. Usually both sources will include the date of the person's conviction and basic information about the charges.

What's the difference between Corrections Records included in the Premium searches and those found within the DirectPass links?

Corrections records found through our DirectPass links are generally databases that provide information on current inmates. The advantage to researching corrections records through the Premium service is that in many jurisdictions you can look into the past and find an older criminal record, perhaps for an inmate who is no longer in prison. His or her record lives on, and their prior sentence could be important for you to know about.

We recommend consulting the description for every DirectPass corrections link and Premium corrections data source for specific information on the dates covered in that jurisdiction.

III. TROUBLESHOOTING TIPS

Compare before you search

Please read the descriptions carefully and compare what's available in each state. Generally you'll find more current information in the DirectPass databases, but it will take more time to do your search. The Premium databases will cover more databases, but the information isn't as current as DirectPass (most of our Premium databases are updated monthly).

Different results?

If the information you found through a link in our DirectPass directory gave you more information or more current records than our Premium site, there is a good reason. We can't instantaneously update every jurisdiction in our Premium database—most are updated monthly, some less often. So we recommend that you use our Premium service to get the most coverage in a single search—and then follow up with DirectPass to get more information about a case or record.

Can't find the record?

If you believe that there is a criminal record for that person somewhere, but it doesn't appear in our databases, there are several reasons. One is that not every county or state makes their criminal record information available. Or it's possible that the person may be under arrest or awaiting trial. Wants, warrants, and arrests technically aren't criminal records. Criminal records are those where there has been a disposition or conviction. We aren't trying to hide records from you—we're trying to give you access to the most records possible. Through our DirectPass and Premium services we clearly offer the most complete coverage of criminal records and criminal record sources available on the Internet.

The Breakdown

For more information on what is covered for each state, our DirectPass directory of criminal records is located here: Search Systems DirectPass Criminal Records Directory, and a state-by-state listing of what's covered in our Premium service is located here: Search Systems Premium Criminal Record Databases.

More Sex Offenders

One last thing—we've included each state's statewide sex offender registry in the DirectPass criminal records directory. But many states offer additional city and/or county databases, so we have a separate DirectPass directory for sex offenders. For a better idea of what's available, go here: Search Systems DirectPass Sex Offenders Directory.

CALIFORNIA

Issues regarding California criminal records:

- 1) The California Department of Justice criminal history records are NOT available to the public.
- 2) By law, access to that information is restricted to legitimate law enforcement purposes and authorized Applicant Agencies (youth organizations, human resources agencies, contract employers, and in-home supportive care providers).
- 3) The public may access county court records, but only a relatively small number of California counties make their court information available online.
- 4) Court records indicate that a case was filed, but often don't indicate dispositions. Also, the information about each case is often limited.
- 5) Most California counties have Superior (usually felony) and Municipal (usually misdemeanor and traffic) courts. Some counties provide information from both courts, but some only provide Superior Court information.

VI. ABOUT SEARCH SYSTEMS PUBLIC RECORDS

In 1996 there were only a very small number of public record databases on the Internet and they were difficult to find. Google hadn't been invented yet and AltaVista was one of the more popular search engines. Back then we were primarily a skiptracing (finding people) and background search company working for law firms, financial institutions such as Wells Fargo Bank, and title insurance companies such as Old Republic, First American, and Fidelity National Title. In order to help our employees and clients find public records on the Internet we developed a directory of links to public records called pac-info.com, which later became searchsystems.net.

Since we started this service, we've found and added over 40,000 links to public record databases. These links are organized by geographic location and by type of public record, and a helpful description has been added to each one. At Search Systems, we add new databases each day, and we continually evaluate each link to determine if it's working. If a link is not working, we repair it immediately.

We believe that Search Systems is far the best resource for public records—especially criminal records—on the Internet.
